The Two Headed Beast

is the collective name for Pauline Hughes (Liverpool) and Pablo Martín (Buenos Aires). They met via Instagram, with each being drawn to the other's singular expression of humanity using the recurring image of the head. A shared admiration of African, Indigenous and Contemporary art and objects fuels their narrative along with a continuous desire to experiment with materials, tools and medium. From the start there was a strong wish to see their pieces displayed together and this has now been made possible through a collaboration with Editions Gallery.

I make figurative sculptures that feel solid and reassuring although, somewhat perversely out of ceramic a material that is inherently fragile. However, it is in the vulnerability of the material that its beauty and poignancy lie, a metaphor for our finite lives and the perfect material to represent the human condition.

The sculptures are the subject of my drawings for this exhibition.

Since 2018 I develop my series Black heads as part of a work that I present in this exhibition.

The head is part of the body and part of our identity, something that defines us, but is also an object/monument/sculpture/vessel.

I am interested in ritual and the connection with the sacred beyond the anatomical.

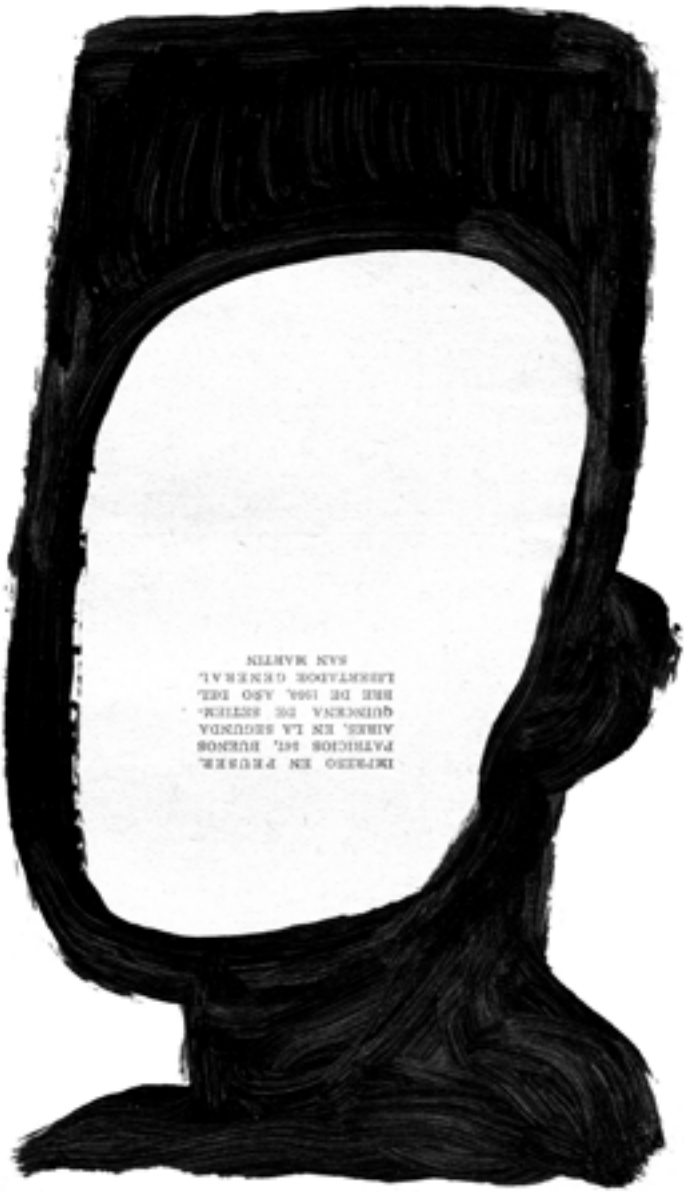

TTHB is an opportunity to dialogue from different geographies and unite the different techniques and ways of doing that connect us.
